THE FOE TO GOOD HEALTH.

Stomachs from the promiscuous drug taking.

A half pint of boiling water sipped very slowly when the first indication of distress appears will relieve almost instantly. If there is an acute attack of a teaspoonful of aromatic spirits of ammonia in a third of a glass of water will dissipate the accumulation of gas. A cup of boiling water taken each morning twenty minutes before eating is a bath for the stomach, a stimulant to the liver, and much help for the one who insists on eating fried food each morning. A word as to fried food. There are things other than potatoes and meat that are fried; even those may be taken with impunity once a week, but when the entire meal has been subjected to the frying process six days out of seven, there's a story. At a luncheon I was asked by another guest, "If I would have some paralysis." I was naturally surprised at the question and looked to see offered me delicious looking cutlets. This is a species of food very popular, with nothing whatever to recommend it in the form of nourishment, and the guest was right. Paralysis is often due to the constant feeding of this kind of food, containing nothing to nourish the body, but everything to cause indigestion.
